PRAYZVIBES FINDS A DIFFERENT VIEW ABOVE THE NOISE ON 'MOUNTAIN DAY'

FRANCONIAN SWITZERLAND - BAVARIA - GERMANY

Sometimes perspective is not found by solving the problem in front of you. Sometimes you need to change where you are standing. For Bavarian indie folk artist PRAYZVIBES, Mountain Day began with precisely that experience: climbing away from the noise until what once felt overwhelming could finally be seen from somewhere else.

Released on 31 July 2026, Mountain Day opens Transience, a four - song EP concerned with movement, release and renewal. Its origin is intensely personal. The song grew from a real journey to a mountain hut more than 2,000 metres above sea level, where physical distance changed the scale of what PRAYZVIBES was carrying.

As the physical distance increased, emotional clarity followed.

"I thought I needed to escape. I just needed a different view."

That distinction becomes the philosophical centre of Mountain Day. The mountain is real, but it also functions as metaphor. The song considers the possibility that healing does not always demand complete reinvention. There are moments when temporarily removing ourselves from the immediacy of our circumstances allows their scale to change.

That idea is reflected in the recording itself.

Created independently in Bavaria, Mountain Day was written, performed, recorded, produced, mixed and mastered by PRAYZVIBES. Acoustic guitar and intimate vocals establish its foundations, accompanied by upright bass, piano, subtle strings and natural percussion. Rather than filling every available space, the arrangement has deliberately been given room to breathe.

As the song develops, its sonic perspective widens too. What begins closely and personally gradually opens into something more expansive, mirroring the physical experience that inspired it. There is cinematic scale here, but not at the expense of the human performance underneath. This is fundamental to PRAYZVIBES, the independent project of Bavarian singer songwriter, musician and producer. "PRAYZVIBES is an independent songwriter, producer and live artist based in Franconian Switzerland, Bavaria. Voice and black acoustic guitar remain at the centre; rhythm and texture enter only when the song asks for them. From an atelier beneath the rafters to street performances, the project keeps the human encounter close to the music. Rooted in the landscapes of the Alps and Franconian Switzerland, the project treats nature as more than attractive scenery. Landscapes become spaces for reflection, solitude and reconnection, with lived experiences transformed into songs that deliberately leave enough interpretative room for listeners to bring their own histories. Influences include Bob Marley, Mumford & Sons, Trevor Hall, Xavier Rudd and Sam Garrett, alongside lessons in artistic authenticity drawn from figures as stylistically distant as 2Pac and Green Day. What connects those references is less a single sonic template than an insistence upon conviction.

That human connection also extends to performance. PRAYZVIBES recently launched the Transience live chapter in Salzburg through a stripped back setup of vocals, acoustic guitar and foot percussion. During the performance, a passing celebration unexpectedly became part of the atmosphere, turning the moment into an example of the spontaneous interaction the project values.

The recording's restraint is its strength. Nothing is added simply to make the song feel larger; voice, guitar and carefully placed textures carry the emotional weight. In an era where production possibilities seem almost limitless, its identity instead rests upon something remarkably tangible: one artist, lived experience, instruments, landscape and the decision not to overcomplicate what already carries meaning.

Mountain Day does not suggest that climbing a mountain makes difficulty disappear.

It proposes something subtler.

From far enough above the noise, perhaps we can finally see what deserves to follow us back down.

"There is cinematic scale here, but not at the expense of the human performance underneath."
